

Dr. Lee Sherry – Transcript

If you could change the way colleges and universities do things, what would you choose?

Hi, I'm Lee Sherry, Chairperson, Department of Special Education and Child Development, and here's our idea.

We've put our entire Master of Arts in Teaching in Special Education online to make it convenient for you to complete your degree in the shortest time possible while maintaining your family and career responsibilities.

In most cases, classes are available 24-hours a day, seven days a week and offer the ease and convenience of earning a degree or taking individual courses at your own personal computer.

Our MAT Online Campus program is delivered using the latest technology to provide learning environments through the Internet. You'll never miss a class online when the course comes to your home or your workplace! Courses are interactive, with e-mail links between you, your professor, and your virtual classmates.

Like an on-campus class, our Masters of Arts in Teaching classes include important components such as lectures, readings, slide presentations, multimedia clips, evaluations, quizzes, and exams.

Moving beyond the walls of a brick and mortar classroom, our online classes use sophisticated resources and communications tools that enhance learning.

So welcome to UNC Charlotte's Master of Arts in Teaching in Special Education. Your education will prepare you to meet the needs of students in the diverse social, cultural environment in which you will teach.

Welcome.
