George Washington Carver

(January 1864 – January 5, 1943)
was an American scientist, botanist, educator, and inventor. The exact day and year of his birth are unknown; he is believed to have been born before slavery was abolished in Missouri in January 1864. Much of Carver's fame is based on his research into and promotion of crops as alternatives to cotton, such as peanuts and sweet potatoes.

"When you do the common things in life in an uncommon way, you will command the attention of the world."

Madame C.J. Walker

(December 23, 1867 – May 25, 1919)
was an African-American businesswoman, hair care entrepreneur and philanthropist. She made her fortune by developing and marketing a hugely successful line of beauty and hair products for black women under the company she founded, Madam C.J. Walker Manufacturing Company.

"I got my start by giving myself a start."

Mary McLeod Bethune

(July 10, 1875 – May 18, 1955)
was an American educator and civil rights leader best known for starting a school for black students in Daytona Beach, Florida, that eventually became Bethune-Cookman University and for being an advisor to President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"We have a powerful potential in our youth, and we must have the courage to change old ideas and practices so that we may direct their power toward good ends."

Marcus Mosiah Garvey

(17 August 1887 – 10 June 1940)
was a publisher, journalist, entrepreneur, Black Nationalist, Pan-Africanist, and orator. Marcus Garvey was founder of the Universal Negro Improvement Association and African Communities League (UNIA-ACL).

"Liberate the minds of men and ultimately you will liberate the bodies of men."
